FOREWORD

The publication of a trilateral concordance of industry classifications involving the United States Office of Management and Budget, Statistics Canada, and the Statistical Office of the European Communities is a most important step forward in achieving convergence between the national classifications of North America and the standard classification adopted by members of the European Union. The concordance, which builds on a similar exercise carried out between Canada and the United States, is unprecedented in terms of the detailed review to which the international classifications examined were subject. Because of this detail, it holds great promise for future users of industry statistics who wish to conduct comparisons between the industrial structures of Europe and North America.

Hitherto, the serious user of international industry statistics has had to rely on approximate conversions of national into international standards. The publication of the concordance assures the basis for a much better grasp of the error to which such comparisons are subject.

Detailed examinations of this kind - while laborious and painstaking - are essential to learn about the limitations and ambiguities of national and international standards. The staff of the three statistical agencies who took part in this exercise should be praised. They are, of course, fully aware of the importance of what they learned and how much challenging labour was involved. In addition, they should know that this labour has brought them the gratitude of an increasingly large constituency of users who will find one less barrier to a better understanding of how the international economy works.

PREFACE

This publication presents concordances between the International Standard Industrial Classification Of All Economic Activities, Revision 3, (ISIC Rev.3) of the United Nations, and the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification (1980 SIC) of Canada, the 1987 Standard Industrial Classification (1987 SIC) of the United States, and the Statistical Classification of Economic Activities in the European Community, Revision 1 (NACE Rev.1). It was developed by Statistics Canada, the U.S. Bureau of the Census (the designated representative of the U.S. Office of Management and Budget) and Eurostat, the Statistical Office of the European Communities.

The concordances identify the relationships between each of the three classifications and ISIC Rev.3. The representatives of the three statistical agencies have assigned the classes of their industrial classifications, in whole or in part, to the classes of ISIC Rev.3, by relating the content of the classes of their respective classifications to that of ISIC Rev.3. Together they have interpreted the content of the classes of ISIC Rev.3 and agreed upon the assignment of all the activities described in their own classifications, including those which have not been explicitly described in the ISIC Rev.3 manual of the United Nations.

For detailed descriptions of industries and the underlying concepts used in the classifications, users should refer to the published classification manuals of ISIC Rev.3, the 1980 Canadian SIC, the 1987 U.S. SIC, and NACE Rev.1. For information on the product classification of the United Nations and its relationship to ISIC Rev.3, reference should be made to the provisional Central Product Classification (CPC) of the United Nations. For supplementary information on Statistics Canada's interpretation of the Canadian SIC, users should consult the 1980 SIC Coding Manual, and for the goods classification and its relationship to the SIC, they should refer to the Standard Classification of Goods (SCG) 1988 and the concordance between the SCG 1988 and the 1980 SIC. For supplementary information on the U.S. Bureau of the Census' interpretation of the U.S. SIC, reference should be made to the Numerical List of Manufactured and Mineral Products 1992 and the Industry and Product Classification Manual 1992. For supplementary information on Eurostat's interpretation of NACE Rev.1, reference should be made to the Classification of Products by Activity (CPA) of Eurostat (See References).

This publication displays the concordances between the three classifications and ISIC Rev.3. However, the work has also produced bilateral concordances between the three classifications. These will be available from the three agencies, from: Rodger O. Lee, Standards Division, Statistics Canada, Ottawa K1A OT6; James Kristoff, Chief, Industry, Commodity and Classification, U.S.Bureau of the Census, Washington DC 20233; and Niels Langkjaer-Oehlenschlaeger, Macroeconomic Classifications and Statistical and Accounting Coordination, Eurostat, Bâtiment Jean Monnet, L-2920, Luxembourg. The implicit United States-Canada/Canada-United States SIC Concordance contained in this publication supersedes the version published in 1991, as Concordance between the Standard Industrial Classifications of the United States and Canada / Canada and the United States, by the U.S. Bureau of the Census and Statistics Canada (see References). A list of changes will be made available, on request, by the two agencies.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The concordance between the industrial classifications of Canada, the United States, the European Union and ISIC Revision 3 of the United Nations, was prepared under the general guidance of Jacob Ryten, Assistant Chief Statistician, Business and Trade Statistics Field, Statistics Canada and Charles A. Waite Associate Director for Economic Programs, U.S. Bureau of the Census. Shaila Nijhowne, Director, Standards Division, Statistics Canada, Harvey Monk formerly Assistant Chief, Directory Development and Operations, Economic Census and Surveys Division, and Niels Langkjaer-Oehlenschlaeger, Macroeconomic Classifications and Statistical and Accounting Coordination, Statistical Office of the European Communities, directed and coordinated the preparation of the concordance by Rodger O. Lee, Keith Hannett, Jack Bailey, Moreno Da Pont, Andreas Trau, Douglas Cameron and JoAnn Casey of Standards Division, Statistics Canada, and James Kristoff and Randy Summers of the U.S. Bureau of the Census. The project greatly benefitted from the expert advice and assistance of Walter Neece of the U.S. Bureau of the Census. Leslie Chandler, Dominique Perron and Guy Auger of Statistics Canada and Walter C. Odom, Chief, and the staff of Administrative and Publication Services Division, U.S.Bureau of the Census assisted in preparing the manuscript for publication. The concordance was produced by Statistics Canada and published by the U.S. Bureau of the Census.

INTRODUCTION

The industrial classifications of the United Nations, Canada, the United States, and the European Union, which are the subject of this concordance, have been designed for the collection, dissemination and analysis of economic statistics. They are systems designed to classify economic units by type of activity and are mainly designed for the classification of units about which production statistics are collected, namely units that are the same as, or equivalent to, those described in ISIC Rev.3 as the establishment, the kind of activity unit and the local unit. It is suggested in ISIC Rev.3 that the higher levels of aggregation of the classification can also be used for the classification of enterprises. Canada and the U.S. have separate industrial classifications for enterprises.

The industrial classifications compared have each been developed with a hierarchical structure of four levels. The number of classes at each level is:

Level of Aggregation	Industrial Classification
	ISIC Rev.3	CDN SIC 1980	U.S. SIC 1987	NACE REV.1
1 digit	17	18	11	17
2 digits	60	76	83	60
3 digits	159	318	416	222
4 digits	292	860	1005	503

ISIC Rev.3 has two functions: (i) to serve as a standard or guide for new systems or changes and (ii) to serve as a standard for comparisons among countries which may be compiling data on different systems. It is useful, therefore, to examine how the national systems compare to ISIC Rev.3.

This publication displays the relationship between the lowest or four-digit level of each of the three industrial classifications, the 1980 Canadian SIC, the 1987 U.S. SIC and NACE Rev.1, and the four-digit level of ISIC Rev.3 of the United Nations.

(In the discussion that follows, ISIC Rev.3 will be referred to as ISIC, the 1980 Canadian SIC as the CDN SIC, the 1987 U.S. SIC as the U.S. SIC, and NACE Rev.1 as NACE. The discussion will name them in this order because this is the order in which they appear in the Concordance Table.)

THE CONCORDANCES BETWEEN THE THREE CLASSIFICATIONS AND ISIC

The main Concordance Table combines three individual concordances. It shows the relationship between the four-digit classes of ISIC Rev.3 and those of the 1980 CDN SIC, the 1987 U.S. SIC, and NACE Rev.1. It is arranged in ISIC order.

The Canadian and U.S. industrial classifications are systems designed to describe the industrial structures of their own economies. They were developed independently of ISIC. NACE, on the other hand, was developed by disaggregating the lower levels of ISIC to meet the statistical requirements of the European Communities.

At the lowest or four-digit level, ISIC is much more aggregated than the lowest level of the other classifications. The differences between the groupings of activities to be found in ISIC as compared to the current CDN and U.S. SICs, lead to many partial relationships. In every case, NACE is simply a further disaggregation of ISIC. In order to retain a four-digit system for NACE, both the three- and four-digit levels of ISIC have been expanded, consequently the numbering system does not always follow that of ISIC.

It should be noted that the table displays the relationship between each agency's industrial classification and ISIC. There is no line by line correspondence among the classes of each classification, reading across the table. The Preface explains how the bilateral concordances between each pair of classifications, implicit in this table, can be obtained.

Because of the numerous partial relationships, it is useful for users to see, to which other ISIC industries any particular Canadian or U.S. industry is linked. The links between the CDN SIC and ISIC and the U.S. SIC and ISIC are therefore, reversed and arranged in CDN SIC and U.S. SIC order, in Appendices A and B.

The few Canadian and U.S. industries which cannot be directly linked to any particular ISIC class at the four-digit level are listed in Appendix C.

There are a few cases in which (i) all three agencies have reason to interpret the content of an ISIC class differently from its description and (ii) there are differences between Statistics Canada and the statistical agencies of the U.S. on the one hand, and Eurostat on the other, with respect to the assignment of activities to ISIC classes. These are listed in Appendix D.

The methodology used to create the concordances and the notes that explain all the partial linkages is described in Appendix E.

Some examples that illustrate differences in the assignment of activities to industries and industry groups in the three classifications are provided in Appendix F.

THE CONCEPTUAL BASIS, COVERAGE AND OVERALL STRUCTURE OF THE CLASSIFICATIONS

Conceptual basis of the classifications

Businesses combine resources, labour, capital, raw materials, and services to produce goods and services. The CDN and U.S. SICs, ISIC, and NACE define industries or classify businesses in terms of the similarity of activities undertaken and goods and services produced. If similarity of input structures, processes and technologies used, or production functions are described as supply-side criteria, and combinations of producers of goods and services which are substitutes, complements, or cater to similar markets, are described as demand side criteria, then all three industrial classifications are based on mixed criteria. A comparison of the classifications and their structures reveals no particular pattern of criteria used. Sometimes production-oriented criteria are used and at other times demand-oriented ones. The U.S SIC has more four-digit classes than the CDN SIC or ISIC and brings to bear more supply-side considerations in their definition than the other two classifications. However, at the four-digit level, the majority of classes in both the CDN and U.S. SICs are supply-oriented. There is a certain tendency, in the CDN SIC, to define the early stages of fabrication of manufactures in terms of component material and final products by end use. In subdividing the three- and four-digit classes of ISIC, NACE displays a tendency to create demand-oriented product groupings.

Coverage of the classifications

In principle, the coverage of the classifications is the same. They include all the activities defined within the boundaries of economic production by the System of National Accounts.

Structure of the classifications

The overall approach towards creating the higher level structure of ISIC and the CDN and the U.S. SICs is similar, but the number of categories at the highest level and the way in which they are ordered is different. Further, the manner in which the activities are grouped into industries and industry groups varies. NACE follows the structure of ISIC at the higher levels and, at the three- and four-digit levels, NACE industries are subdivisions of ISIC categories that align with the structure of ISIC.

The comparison, shown at the beginning of the Introduction, displays the fact that, at the highest level, ISIC has 17 tabulation categories, the CDN SIC has 18 divisions, the U.S. SIC has 10 divisions (plus one for non-classifiable establishments), while NACE has 17 sections which are the same as the tabulation categories of ISIC. The highest level classes are listed in a table that precedes the main Concordance Table.

The differences in the structures of the classifications are illustrated by the fact that currently about 28% of the four-digit classes of the CDN SIC, and 20% of the U.S. SIC, cross the boundaries of ISIC two-digit groups. At the four-digit level, 58% of CDN SIC classes and 66% of U.S. SIC classes are equal to, or part of, an ISIC four-digit class. The much greater detail of the U.S. SIC at the four-digit level makes it possible to assign more of them in their entirety, to a four-digit ISIC class, whereas the CDN SIC has more industries that are different from those of ISIC.

A few important similarities and differences between ISIC and the CDN and U.S. SICs, and NACE are discussed below. The Concordance Table does not display the relationship of the higher levels of the classifications. However, in the discussion that follows, some comments are made both about the overall structures of the classifications and the detail. In the broad comparison, no attempt has been made to be comprehensive, a few illustrative issues are mentioned and examples are provided.

STRUCTURAL DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THE CLASSIFICATIONS

Differences between the structures of ISIC and the CDN and U.S. SICs can be found at all levels of the classifications. Differences at the higher levels of the classifications do not necessarily lead to concordance difficulties at the lower levels. Differences in approach at the four-digit level give rise to the partial relationships displayed in the concordance. Some structural differences are described below:

(1) BASIC DIFFERENCE IN APPROACH IN CREATING INDUSTRIES

Trade in motor vehicles

At the highest level, ISIC differs from the CDN and U.S. SICs in combining the retail and wholesale trade of motor vehicles into a special division for the sale, maintenance and repair of motor vehicles and motor cycles and the retail sale of automotive fuel, and separating this activity from the rest of retail and wholesale trade. With respect to the four-digit level of the CDN SIC, partial assignments to other divisions of ISIC occur because the rebuilding of certain parts, that are classified with the wholesaling of motor vehicle parts in the CDN SIC, have to be reassigned, for purposes of the concordance, to other ISIC industries in Manufacturing. In the case of the U.S. SIC, partial assignments occur only because, service station equipment and mechanics tools are classified elsewhere.

Wholesale Trade

In the area of wholesale trade, ISIC is fundamentally different from the CDN and U.S. SICs in that it distinguishes wholesale trade on a fee or contract basis as a separate four-digit industry. It, therefore, separates commission agents and commodity brokers from other wholesalers. As this activity is not distinguished separately in the CDN and U.S. SICs and the activity can be found in all their wholesale trade classes, it has not been possible to assign any particular industries to this class in the concordances.

Each classification differs in its treatment of businesses that sell to both businesses and persons. The CDN SIC usually assigns them to Wholesale Trade while the U.S. SIC has specific exceptions based on product sold or the characteristics of the business. In ISIC, a choice has to be made based on the predominant class of customer, which results in an assignment of the business to either wholesale or retail trade.

Recycling

ISIC delineates a special recycling division at the two-digit level under Manufacturing. It is defined in ISIC as an activity that transforms waste into an intermediate product. This activity is not recognised as a separate industry in Manufacturing in the CDN and U.S. SICs, though some of it can be found separately in both SICs in Wholesale Trade. For the concordance, the particular activities that would fall into the recycling industry, as defined in ISIC, have been identified and reassigned from the Canadian and U.S. classes in which they are found.

Research and Development (R & D)

For research and development, ISIC has a separate division consisting of a number of industries. Canada has no separately defined class for R & D at any level. The activity is assigned to other industries either on the basis of the nature of the research, for example, scientific research is treated as a technical or scientific service activity, or on the basis of its use, as in the case of agricultural research which is treated as a service incidental to agriculture. In Canada, R&D activities are also undertaken by establishments within Manufacturing or as ancillary activities of manufacturing establishments. They are not classified separately from the units they serve.

The U.S. SIC has separate industries which group to a three-digit class for Research, development, and testing services, in Services, into which establishments undertaking research on a fee or contract basis for other enterprises are classified. However, not all establishments engaged in research are classified to these industries. Establishments primarily engaged in research, development and testing of aircraft, guided missiles and space vehicle units and parts, covered by U.S. SIC industry groups 372 or 376, are classified as operating establishments in Manufacturing if they are part of an enterprise that usually manufactures such products. These enterprises are often funded by government contracts. Establishments primarily engaged in research, development and testing of products not covered by U.S. SIC industry group 372 or 376, are classified as auxiliary establishments (see 1987 U.S. SIC p.14).

For purposes of the concordance, no relationship between the ISIC R&D classes and any of the research and development activities in Manufacturing in either the CDN or U.S. SICs is shown.

Research and development undertaken by institutions within government are classified in public administration and defence in ISIC and in the CDN and U.S. SICs.

(2) TREATMENT OF INTEGRATED MANUFACTURING AND RETAILING

In a case of vertical integration, according to ISIC, a unit should be classified in the class indicated by the nature of the final product, unless the context of a specific category requires otherwise (ISIC Rev.3 p.29). Three such specified categories include the cases of bakeries, candy shops and custom tailoring, in which the manufacture of the product and its retail sale occurs in the same unit, at the same location. In ISIC, these are explicitly classified to Manufacturing, whereas in the CDN and U.S. SICs, they are classified in Retail Trade. In the U.S. SIC, processing, incidental or subordinate to selling, conducted at retail stores and separate establishments selling merchandise, for personal or household consumption, which has been manufactured by other establishments of the same company, are classified in Retail Trade.

(3) TREATMENT OF PROCESS-BASED INDUSTRIES

There are certain industries, in all four classifications, which are defined by virtue of their manufacturing process rather than by virtue of the products produced. Examples of these are the metal forging, pressing, stamping and roll-forming industries, and the casting of iron and steel and other non-ferrous metals industries. These industries are characterised as being able to produce a wide variety of different products, on a job or order basis, using the same process. The products may be both parts and final products. There are a few exceptions, such as the case of automotive stampings discussed later, but generally, unless the establishments which produce castings, stampings and forgings are also engaged in fabricating operations such as machining and assembling, in the CDN and U.S. SICs, all of the production of these products is assigned to these process-based industries by virtue of the process used, rather than by the product produced.

In ISIC, when the activity is specialized and any of the above processes are used to produce only one or a limited range of products, which have their own industry, the activity is supposed to be classified by the product produced rather than by the process used.

In the CDN SIC, most producers using these technologies are not specialised and produce a range of products. Many of them are included in these process-based industries, so these industries have generally been assigned, in their entirety, to the equivalent ISIC industry. Only occasionally have specialized producers using these technologies been identified and assigned to other ISIC industries.

The case of automotive stampings is such an example. There is, however, a difference in the way in which ISIC and the CDN and U.S. SICs handle specialised producers of automotive or motor vehicle stampings. ISIC includes the activity in the motor vehicle parts industry. The CDN SIC uses supply-side criteria in distinguishing the activity as a separate industry but then, like ISIC, it uses a demand approach to group the industry with motor vehicle parts and accessories. The U.S. SIC uses supply-side considerations both to identify a separate industry and to group the industry with all other stampings in a metal products industry group. For purposes of the concordance, the U.S. industry can be assigned to the manufacture of parts and accessories for motor vehicles and their engines in ISIC.

(4) TREATMENT OF REPAIR AND INSTALLATION

Repair

In ISIC, with certain exceptions, the activity of maintenance and repair of industrial, commercial and similar machinery and equipment is associated with the manufacture of the equipment and classified in Manufacturing. In the CDN SIC, the repair of this type of machinery is to be found, some in Manufacturing, some in Construction and most of it in Wholesale Trade. In the U.S. SIC, there are separate classes for repair grouped together in Services.

Installation

In ISIC, this activity is supposed to be classified in the same class of Manufacturing as the manufacture of the item installed (see ISIC Rev.3 p.76). In the CDN and U.S. SICs,the activity of installation of machinery is treated as part of Construction. In ISIC, under Building installation, in Construction, there is reference only to "...installation of...electric power and transformer plants, telecommunication and radar plants, etc." (ISIC Rev.3 p 109), which might very well contain some installation of machinery but, because neither Canada nor the U.S. differentiate the machinery or equipment being installed, it was not possible to allocate either the Canadian or the U.S. activity of installation to particular ISIC four-digit classes in Manufacturing.

(5) OTHER DIFFERENCES IN THE ASSIGNMENT OF ACTIVITIES TO INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRY GROUPS

Differences among the classifications arise at all levels. Differences at the higher levels do not necessarily mean that there are concordance difficulties at the lower levels. However, the CDN and U.S. SICs both contain some classes at the four-digit level, the activities of which have been difficult to assign to ISIC four-digit classes. They are listed in Appendix C.

The different structures of the classifications demonstrate the use of different criteria to group activities and goods and services produced, into industries and industry groups. Some examples, drawn from different divisions of ISIC, are provided in Appendix F.

INTERPRETING THE CONTENT OF ISIC

As in any classification, the description provided in the ISIC manual for each four digit class, does not mention every activity in detail. To allocate activities which have not been specifically mentioned, interpretations have to be made.

The fact that ISIC, an activity classification, has been aligned for goods-producing industries with the goods part of the Central Product Classification (CPC) which is based on the Harmonised Commodity Description and Coding System (HS), has created certain difficulties of interpretation of the content of ISIC classes with respect to transportable goods, particularly in Manufacturing. Although it has been accepted that ISIC and the CPC do not follow the structure of the HS, the contents of HS categories have often been assigned to CPC classes and ISIC industries, creating some uncertainty as to where a product, not specifically mentioned in ISIC, should be assigned.

In ISIC, the relationship between ISIC and the CPC is described as being one in which "...the product classifications (HS and CPC), in principle, combine in one category goods or services that are normally produced in only one industry as defined in ISIC." (ISIC Rev.3, p.37). Particular difficulty arises in the treatment of parts. The goods part of the CPC is based on the HS, which was primarily designed as a commodity classification for Customs purposes. It follows the general principle that, when parts are suitable for use solely or principally in a specific or particular kind of machine, they are to be classified with the machine for which the part is intended. On the other hand, when parts are regarded as being general purpose parts, they have their own classes in the HS and have been assigned their own industries in ISIC. Examples are the manufacture of pumps, gaskets, insulated wire and printed circuit boards.

As the detail provided in the industry classes under Manufacturing in ISIC is not exhaustive, to classify parts, recourse has to be taken to an analysis of how the part is produced and by whom, or to the HS. It is evident that where no separate six-digit class exists in the HS for a particular part and the part does not belong in a separate HS class, the manufacture of the part has to be included in the same industry as the manufacture of the machine of which it is a component. However, when a product has a separate six-digit HS code, even if it is grouped with the associated machine in the HS, a choice can be made.

For their own national classifications, Canada and the U.S. make their own independent choices in assigning parts either to their own industries or to the same industry as produces the machine in which they are used. The choice is usually made on the basis of whether the parts are general or special purpose.

The classification of pumps in the three classifications is illustrative. An HS-based commodity approach to the classification of pumps is used in ISIC, while Canada and the U.S. have a different approach in their classifications. In ISIC, all pumps are classified in an industry for the manufacture of pumps, compressors, taps and valves. The CDN and U.S. SICs also have separate classes for the manufacture of general purpose industrial and commercial pumps, but they do not include certain pumps that have specific end uses and may be manufactured in specialised establishments. For example, both Canada and the U.S. include the manufacture of motor vehicle pumps in classes defined as containing motor vehicle parts. Also, the U.S. SIC has a separate class for establishments producing fluid power pumps and motors. The CDN SIC assigns the production of fluid power pumps used in aircraft to the Aircraft and Aircraft Parts Industry and all other fluid power pumps to the Turbine and Mechanical Power Transmission Equipment Industry.

It is not always clear to which ISIC industry the manufacture of a part, that is not explicitly mentioned, should be assigned. The HS, not being an industry-of-origin classification, is not concerned with how or where the product is produced. Taking an activity approach, Canada and the U.S. have sometimes assigned a specialised part to the ISIC industry in which it is produced, rather than with the industry that manufactures the machine in which it is used. An example of this is the manufacture of wooden cabinets for radios and television sets, which are mainly produced by furniture manufacturers. They have therefore chosen to classify them in the furniture industry in ISIC.

DIFFERENCES IN INTERPRETATION

In the majority of cases, the three agencies have made the same interpretation and assigned activities not explicitly mentioned, to the same ISIC class. There were some cases for which all three agencies chose an interpretation different from that implied in ISIC, which included: the reproduction of standard motion picture films; the manufacture of refrigeration compressors; and the activities of own-account actors and directors. They are listed in Appendix D (Section I). They were assigned to the industry in which the activity takes place.

In what amounts to a small number of cases, NACE has assigned activities to different ISIC industries than have Canada and the U.S. The identified differences are listed in Appendix D (Section II).

Some of the differences in the interpretation of the content of ISIC classes between the CDN and U.S. classifications and NACE stem from the use of the CPC to define the content of ISIC classes, on the part of NACE. An example is the assignment of roasting and salting of nuts to an ISIC industry for the processing of fruit and vegetables, by Eurostat because, roasted and salted nuts are part of the CPC assigned to that ISIC class. On the other hand, because roasting of nuts is shown as part of the Manufacture of other food products nec, in the United Nation's manual, Canada and the U.S. have assigned the activity there.

Currently, some of these problems arise from the fact that some CPC goods classes have been defined in terms of high-level HS groups. The relationship between ISIC classes and the goods part of the CPC could be improved by defining CPC classes in terms of six-digit HS classes in certain of the cases where they have been defined at the four-digit level. To get an even better alignment of industries and products, it is sometimes necessary to go further and split six-digit classes, as is done in national HS based commodity classifications that are used to collect production statistics.

Some differences arise because, in NACE, particular assignments of activities have been made to ISIC classes to suit the particular statistical requirements of the European Communities. This is the case in the area of textile manufacturing where, for example, ISIC has a special class for textile finishing. In the CDN SIC, establishments specialising in textile finishing are included in the industry in which the product is produced, because the bulk of the activity is done by businesses that both produce textiles and finish them, and the two activities cannot be separated. For purposes of the concordance, partial assignments are made and the relevant activities are linked to this ISIC class. In the U.S. SIC, separate classes exist for textile finishing which can be concorded to the ISIC class. NACE, however, goes further than the intent of ISIC. It widens the scope of this ISIC class to include not only textile finishing, but also the finishing of textile products and apparel. In their interpretation of the content of ISIC, Canada and the U.S. do not go beyond the intent of ISIC and leave the finishing of textile products and apparel in the ISIC classes in which they are defined.

Other differences may derive from institutional differences or a difference in the organisation of production in North America and Europe (see Appendix F for a discussion of rental services).

APPENDIX C: LIST OF CANADIAN AND U.S. CLASSES NOT CONCORDED OR ONLY PARTIALLY CONCORDED AT THE FOUR-DIGIT LEVEL

Canadian SIC

0159	Fruit and Vegetable Combination Farms	This class has not been linked to any ISIC class. There is no provision for this combination in ISIC.
4229	Other Structural and Related Work	This class has not been linked to any ISIC class. This is a residual class to which no items have yet been assigned.
4255	Millwright and Rigging Work	This class has not been linked to any ISIC class. The installation of machinery in ISIC is classified in the same class as the manufacture of the machinery, except for certain plants such as: electric power and transformer plants; telecommunications; and radar.

United States SIC

1796	Installing Building Equipment n.e.c.	Millwright and rigging work, which is included in this class, has not been linked to any ISIC class. The installation of machinery in ISIC is classified in the same class as the manufacture of the machinery, except for certain plants such as: electric power and transformer plants; telecommunications; and radar.
8744	Facilities Support Services	This class has not been linked to any ISIC class. The establishments classified in this U.S. SIC "furnishing personnel to provide a range of services in support of the operations of other establishments or in providing a number of different continuing services" and could, therefore be classified in various ISIC classes.

APPENDIX D: INTERPRETATION OF ISIC REV.3

Section 1 Activity Reassignment

1. ISIC Rev.3 includes the reproduction of motion picture film in class 2230-Reproduction of recorded media. Canada, the United States and the European Communities prefer to assign this activity to class 9211-Motion and video production and distribution, because it is normally associated with the production of motion pictures.

2. ISIC Rev.3 includes the manufacture of refrigeration compressors in class 2912-Manufacture of pumps, compressors, taps and valves. Canada, the United States and Eurostat prefer to assign this activity to class 2919-Manufacture of other general purpose machinery, because refrigeration compressors are generally produced by manufacturers of refrigeration equipment.

3. ISIC Rev.3 includes the activities of own account actors and directors in class 9219-Other entertainment activities, n.e.c. (see final exclusion in ISIC class 9211). Canada, the United States and the European Communities prefer to assign this activity to class 9214-Dramatic arts, music and other arts activities, where other similar activities are classified.

4. ISIC Rev.3 includes the activities of fairs in class 9249-Other recreational activities. Canada, the United States and the European Communities prefer to assign the activities of agricultural fairs to class 9219-Other entertainment activities, n.e.c., because these fairs are generally for displaying agricultural products and are different from the recreational fairs classified to 9249.

Section 2 Differences in Interpretation

The following table displays differences in the interpretation of ISIC four-digit industries between the European Communities and Canada and the United States. For each of the specified activities, two ISIC codes are displayed. The first ISIC code (ISIC A) is the Eurostat (NACE) interpretation of where the activity would be classified in ISIC Rev.3, while the second ISIC code (ISIC B) is the Canada-United States interpretation.

APPENDIX E: METHODOLOGY USED TO CREATE THE CONCORDANCE BETWEEN ISIC REV.3, CDN SIC 1980, U.S. SIC 1987 AND NACE Rev.1

Two approaches were adopted to establish the relationship between the classifications. Canada and the United States maintain files of activity descriptions (called index items in the United States). These were merged to create a file of some 30,000 activity descriptions, drawn from the classifications, rulings and interpretations of the two countries. These activity descriptions were supplemented with other activity descriptions to create as comprehensive a file as possible. The file of activity descriptions was then related to the industry definitions of ISIC Rev.3 of the United Nations.

Each statistical agency also uses commodity classifications. The goods part of the Provisional Central Product Classification (CPC) of the United Nations is based on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System (HS). The principal-producing ISIC four-digit industry class, with which the CPC class can be associated, is indicated in the Provisional CPC (see References). Statistics Canada and Eurostat also use HS-based commodity classifications for goods, the Standard Classification of Goods (SCG) and the Classification of Products by Activity (CPA), respectively, and these too can be related to industries. The U.S. Bureau of the Census has its own seven-digit system of commodity codes related to the four-digit classes of their SIC.

The methodology adopted for relating the industrial classifications of the three agencies to that of the United Nations was to code each activity description to all four classifications.

Simultaneously, for the goods producing industries, Eurostat and Statistics Canada also compared the relationship between their HS-based commodity classifications and the classes of their industry classifications with that of the CPC and its relationship to ISIC.

A commodity approach to the definition of ISIC industries, accomplished with the help of the CPC categories assigned to each of these industries, did not always lead to the same interpretation of the content of ISIC classes as did an activity approach, indicated by the industry definition of each four-digit ISIC class.

In the majority of cases, the two approaches to the definition of ISIC classes could be reconciled and the three agencies were able to agree on the assignment of activities to ISIC classes. However, some minor differences in the interpretation of the content of ISIC classes, between the Canadian and United States agencies, on the one hand, and Eurostat, on the other, remain. They are a consequence of the fact that Canada and the United States preferred to interpret the content of ISIC classes using the content of industry definitions, i.e. using an activity approach, whereas Eurostat opted for defining them in terms of the content of CPC classes assigned to each ISIC class. Other differences of activity assignment and interpretation were a consequence of institutional differences and differences in the organisation of production in North America and Europe.

The concordances consist of links between the four-digit codes of each classification and ISIC, that were generated from the coded activity files (and reconciled commodity files). In instances where a link was generated only by a commodity, a new activity file entry was created to match the commodity description. Although, in theory, all activities and products are covered, in practice, it may not be possible to explicitly identify all of them in the concordance.

Only those links generated by the activity and commodity files that were considered to be of economic significance are included.

The concordances show a number of different relationships between the three classifications and ISIC. The relationships are of four types: those where a CDN SIC, U.S. SIC or NACE class links to only one ISIC class; those where a CDN or U.S. SIC class links to more than one ISIC class; those where an ISIC class does not link to any CDN or U.S. SIC class; and those where a CDN or U.S. SIC class does not link to any ISIC class. Cases belonging to this last category have been listed in Appendix C.

Where a CDN or U.S. SIC class links to more than one ISIC class, creating a partial industry relationship, a note has been prepared that summarizes the activities and products that have been assigned to the ISIC class.

Methodology for the preparation of notes

(1) Where a CDN or U.S. SIC class links to only one ISIC class, the class title is considered to provide a sufficient description of the content of the class.

(2) Where a CDN or U.S. SIC class cannot be linked to an ISIC class, an explanation is provided in Appendix C

(3) Where an ISIC class cannot be linked to any four-digit CDN or U.S. SIC class, a note is provided in the Concordance table.

(4) Where a CDN or U.S. SIC class links to more than one ISIC class, a description has been prepared that summarizes the allocation of the principal products or activities of each given class, to the respective ISIC classes. In general, product terms are used in the summary descriptions for the manufacturing industries, and activity terms are used for the other industries.

It should be observed that the summaries cover many products by the use of generic, but mutually exclusive, descriptions.

The summaries greatly condense the lists of products that are involved in partial industry relationships. There are, for example, 281 items that describe the relationship of ISIC 3699 to CDN SIC 3999, but they have been described by 57 terms in the description for this class.

It should also be observed that the summary descriptions follow an "inclusion/exclusion" approach.

The "inclusion/exclusion" approach

The "inclusion" approach is used when the content of an ISIC class associated with a CDN or U.S. SIC class is not deemed to be the most important. In such instances, the content of the common element between the two classes is summarized.

The "exclusion" approach is used when the content of a CDN or U.S. SIC class is associated with more than one ISIC class. One of these ISIC classes is deemed to be the most important (i.e., the "natural") ISIC class to that SIC class. In such occurrences, the summary description of the activities associated with the "natural" ISIC class begins with the word "except...", followed by the descriptions of "inclusions" associated with all the other relevant ISIC classes. These are listed in order of appearance in the concordance. Supplementary tables have been provided, which list the ISIC class codes that are related to each of the Canadian and U.S. classifications (see Appendices A and B). It should be noted that not all Canadian or U.S. classes can be primarily related to only one ISIC class. In these instances, therefore, the "inclusion" approach is used.

Example of the "inclusion/exclusion" approach

U.S. SIC 0182, "Food crops grown under cover", concords to ISIC classes 0111, 0112, 0113 and 0500. Of these, it was determined that ISIC class 0112 is the natural (or most important) class associated with this U.S. SIC class, and that ISIC classes 0111, 0113, and 0500 are minor linkages, and, thus, "inclusions". As a result, the concordance is as follows:

0111 Growing of cereals and other crops n.e.c.
0182 Food crops grown under cover
Herbs and ginseng

0112 Growing of vegetables, horticultural specialties and nursery products
0182 Food crops grown under cover
except: herbs, ginseng, fruit, and seaweed

0113 Growing of fruit, nuts, beverage and spice crops
0182 Food crops grown under cover
Fruit

0500 Fishing, operation of fish hatcheries and fish farms; service activities incidental to fishing
0182 Food crops grown under cover
Seaweed

In the interests of clarity, some of the "natural" CDN or U.S. SIC to ISIC linkages use the "inclusion", rather than the "exclusion" approach. This has been limited to those instances where the CDN or U.S. SIC linkages to ISIC are numerous, which would result in a lengthy description of "exclusions".

Example of the exceptions to the "inclusion/exclusion" approach

It is easier to understand the relationship of ISIC 2899 to CDN SIC 3049, using the "inclusion" approach, rather than the "exclusion" approach:

2899 Manufacture of other fabricated metal products n.e.c.

3049* Other stamped and pressed metal products industries
except: air and heating ducts; awnings; chimneys; spray booths; chutes; siding; concrete forms; pipe and elbows; flashing; corner beads; cowels or scoops; light-gauge corrugated culvert pipe; dampers; door hoods; eavestroughing and gutters; expanded metal; flooring; flues; flumes; guard rails; lathe; louvres; machine guards; roofing; roof decks; spouts; store fronts; elevator troughs; window wells; pipe shells; metal stamping, pressing, spinning, forming, rigidizing, and perforating; sheet casings; electronic enclosures; honeycombed metal; perforating on light metal; bicycle pumps; sheet-metal ventilators; washing-machine stampings; ironer parts; porcelain-enamelled parts of appliances; sheet-metal hood ranges; stamped-metal transformer cases; stamped radio or television chassis; stamped-metal and porcelain-enamelled furniture parts (incl. table tops); and minting of coins

Metal products such as aluminum jacketing for pipeline insulation; cooking ware; furnace casings; hospital and household utensils; ladders; licence plates; lunch, tool, and mail boxes; pantryware; and wastepaper baskets

In instances where no ISIC class is deemed to be the most important link to a particular SIC class, only the "inclusion" approach is used. In instances where the summary descriptions for the partial industry relationships of the U.S. classification to ISIC does not follow the "exclusion/inclusion" approach, for comparison purposes, the Canadian summary descriptions may also not follow this approach.

Unless required, words found in the shortened versions of the Canadian and U.S. SIC class titles that are used in this publication are not repeated in the summary descriptions related to them.

Example of the omission of words found in SIC class titles

In the summary description for the link between ISIC 1541 and U.S. SIC 2038, the word "frozen" has been removed from the description, because it is included in the SIC class title.

1541 Manufacture of bakery products
2038* Frozen specialties, not elsewhere classified
French toast, waffles, and pancakes

For the descriptions of partial industry relationships, commas are used to separate stand-alone items (i.e., "Chicory roots, ginseng, ..."), and items modified by a common term. Semi-colons are used to separate groups of items that are modified by a common term (i.e., "Crushed or broken basalt, diabase, gabro, or trap rock; magnesite-dolomite; ...").

Use of "other than" and "such as"

For Canada, in instances where the "exclusion" approach is used, the products following "except" are not found in the given ISIC class, but are covered by the given SIC class. Within the notes, "other than" refers to instances where a particular product is not found in the given SIC class and may or may not be found in the same ISIC class. In general, the U.S. follows this approach. The U.S. descriptions, however, were written primarily within the context of the coverage of the specific U.S. classes. In addition, wherever possible, the relevant ISIC class was considered in the drafting of these descriptions. As well, for Canada, in instances where the "inclusion" approach is used, "including" refers to those products that are not obviously contained in the description, and "such as" refers to examples of products that are contained in the description.

APPENDIX F: DIFFERENCES IN THE ASSIGNMENT OF ACTIVITIES TO INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRY GROUPS.

The Concordance Table shows the relationship between the Canadian 1980 SIC, the U.S. 1987 SIC, NACE Rev.1, and ISIC Rev.3. The number of partial relationships shows differences of structure at the four-digit level.When the first two digits of the four-digit codes assigned to an ISIC industry are different, it indicates that the relationship cuts across the higher level structure of the classification being compared with ISIC. The Table shows that there are many differences in the manner in which activities are grouped into industries and the industries are grouped into the hierarchical structures of each of the classifications, which, in turn, reflect the use of different approaches to the classification of particular activities.

To begin with, some differences in the manner in which activities at the higher levels of the three classifications, ISIC (and NACE) and the CDN and U.S. SICs are ordered, can be observed.

At the highest level, all the classifications start with the primary and extractive industries, followed by manufacturing and construction and then the main service-producing industries.

The classifications begin with Agriculture, Forestry, Fishing , Hunting and Trapping, and Mining, including some services incidental to them, but ISIC combines Agriculture, Hunting and related services, whereas the other two classifications keep Agriculture and related services together and combine Fishing, and Hunting and Trapping. The classifications progress through Manufacturing and Construction and, in this area, the US SIC differs from ISIC Rev.3 by placing Logging in Manufacturing rather than with Forestry, and Construction before Manufacturing.

All of the classifications proceed to the distributive services of Wholesale Trade and Retail Trade, but ISIC creates a separate division which combines the wholesale and retail of motor vehicles.

All of them then go on, though not necessarily in the same order, to the services of: Hotels and Restaurants; Transport, Storage, Communications and Utilities; Finance, Insurance and Real Estate and Business Services; Public Administration and Defence; Education; Health; Other Community Services, Social and Personal Services; Recreational, Cultural and Sporting Activities; and Other Services. At the end of ISIC are: Private households with employed persons, and Extra-territorial organizations and bodies. As the U.S. SIC has only 10 Divisions, there is just one Division for Services, and the more detailed groupings appear at the major group level. Also, the assignment of activities to Manufacturing, Retail Trade and Services is considerably different from that of ISIC (and NACE) and the CDN SIC. For example, among other differences, the U.S. SIC places hotels in Services and eating and drinking places in Retail Trade. The other classifications have a separate division for Accommodation and Food Services.

A feature that affects the content of divisions of the CDN and US SICs is that, in designing the 1980 CDN SIC, the homogeneity criteria of specialisation and coverage were used to group activities both at the four-digit level and at the higher levels of the classification, whereas the U.S. defined the boundaries of its divisions and used these criteria only at the four-digit level (for more information on the homogeneity criteria used in the CDN and U.S. SICs, see the Introduction to each SIC manual and the U.S.-Canada/Canada-U.S. SIC Concordance)

ISIC brings together the producers of transportable goods, non-transportable goods, and services (except for certain related services) as does NACE. In order to do this, certain utilities are regarded as being goods-producing and they are placed as a group with goods-producing industries, after Manufacturing, in ISIC. The other classifications combine both goods-producing and services-producing utilities and show them as one division (or major group in the case of the U.S.) after Transportation and Communication.

Some differences in approach to the grouping of industries to the higher levels of the classification structure and to the grouping of activities to industries, are described below. No attempt has been made to be comprehensive, a few illustrative examples are provided.

ISIC DIVISION 01 - AGRICULTURE, HUNTING AND RELATED SERVICES

At the higher level, all of the classifications have a class for services related to agriculture under Agriculture, because these services are performed on a fee or contract basis for units engaged in agricultural production. However, the activities chosen for classification in this class differ. Veterinary services are assigned to services related to agriculture in both the CDN and U.S. SICs, whereas in ISIC, they are assigned to Health, emphasizing the similarity of service provided, whether to humans or animals. This does not lead to a problem at the four-digit level because both Canada and the U.S. have separate four-digit classes that can be assigned to the ISIC four-digit class. However, in the case of aerial crop spraying, the activity is classified in Services related to agriculture by the U.S. SIC and ISIC, whereas, in the CDN SIC it is classified in Specialty Non-scheduled Air Transport, under Transportation, illustrating the demand-oriented approach implicit in the creation of this class of related services in the U.S. SIC and ISIC and a supply-oriented approach to the assignment of this activity at the divisional level in the CDN SIC.

ISIC DIVISION 02 - FORESTRY, LOGGING AND RELATED SERVICE ACTIVITIES

At the division-level, the U.S. SIC does not include Logging with Forestry Services, but groups it in Manufacturing, as has been mentioned earlier. This does not lead to a problem at the four-digit level. There are, however, some differences of detail that do. An example of the latter is the assignment of the production of wood chips to both Logging and Manufacturing in the CDN and U.S. SICs, and only to Sawmills under Manufacturing in ISIC and NACE. ISIC puts both mobile and stationary chipper mills in the same industry, Manufacturing. The U.S. and Canada classify wood chips produced in the forest, by mobile chipper mills, in Logging, and wood chips produced elsewhere, with Sawmills in Manufacturing. In the U.S. SIC, the two types of activity come together under Manufacturing, because Logging is included under Manufacturing, but in the CDN SIC, they remain in separate divisions. For purposes of the concordance, the activities have been brought together into the one ISIC class under Manufacturing.

ISIC DIVISIONS 10 to 14 - MINING AND QUARRYING

ISIC creates a class of Service activities incidental to oil and gas extraction excluding exploration, but it does not create a class for services related to, or incidental, to mining. At the higher level, a demand-oriented approach is adopted in the CDN and U.S. SICs, in which the activities of mine development work including the removal of overburden and the sinking of shafts, and contract drilling are assigned to this class, in Mining, whereas a supply-oriented approach is used in ISIC, in grouping these activities with Construction.

ISIC DIVISIONS 15 to 37 - MANUFACTURING

Machinery and equipment repairing

In ISIC, with certain exceptions, the activity of maintenance and repair of industrial, commercial and similar machinery and equipment is associated with the manufacture of the equipment. It is generally assigned to Manufacturing. The exceptions are: (i) the repair of office equipment and computers, for which a separate class is created in the division for Computer and related activities ; (ii) the repair of motor vehicles and motorcycles, which is found in the division dedicated to the Sale, maintenance and repair of motor vehicles ; and (iii) the repair of household appliances, equipment and furniture, for which a special class for the Repair of personal and household goods exists in Retail trade. Substantial alteration, renovation or reconstruction of goods is generally considered to be manufacturing.

Like ISIC, both the CDN and U.S. SICs have an industry for the repair of computer equipment which is grouped with computer and related services under Services.

In the CDN SIC, the repair of industrial and commercial machinery is to be found, some in Manufacturing, some in Construction and most of it, in Wholesale Trade. Automotive repair and the repair of household equipment is in Retail Trade but some of the repair of personal and household goods is also in Services.

In the U.S. SIC, there are separate classes for repair grouped together in Services, which include classes for automotive repair and the repair of household equipment.

Machinery manufacturing

In the case of the manufacture of agricultural conveyors and elevators, the functional characteristic of the product is used in ISIC when they are classified in an industry for the manufacture of lifting and handling equipment, while their classification, as part of their respective agricultural machinery industries, reflects a demand-side approach on the part of the CDN and U.S. SICs.

ISIC DIVISION 45 - CONSTRUCTION

There is a difference of approach towards the subdivision of Construction in ISIC and the U.S. SIC and the CDN SIC. ISIC divides Construction into stages: site preparation; building of complete constructions or parts thereof; building installation; building completion; and renting of construction or demolition equipment with operator. Both general contractors and some special-trade contractors fall into many of these classes. In the U.S. SIC, three broad types of construction activity are distinguished: building construction by general contractors or by operative builders; heavy construction and other than building by general contractors and special-trade contractors; and construction activity by other special-trade contractors. In the CDN SIC, the subdivisions of this activity are primarily based on the manner in which the industry is organised into general contractors and special-trade contractors. It is the general contractor who is responsible for the entire construction project. The general contractor may undertake the work or subcontract it to special-trade contractors. In Canada, general contractors are then subdivided by type of construction, residential, non-residential, commercial, etc., and special trade-contractors are subdivided by type. The difference in approach leads to some of the partial assignments found in this division.

ISIC DIVISION 64 - POST AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS

One difference in this area is the inclusion of air courier services in this division of ISIC, whereas the CDN and U.S. SICs assign this activity to Air Transport.

ISIC DIVISION 66 - INSURANCE AND PENSION FUNDING EXCEPT COMPULSORY SOCIAL SECURITY.

ISIC and the U.S. SIC both separate compulsory insurance programs and group them in Public Administration and Defence, whereas, in the CDN SIC, they are grouped with all other types of insurance in Insurance.

ISIC DIVISION 70 - REAL ESTATE ACTIVITIES

ISIC has a separate class for real estate activities on a fee or contract basis. Unlike the U.S., in the CDN SIC, real estate owner-operators are not distinguished from real estate third party managers. So the activities to be assigned to this ISIC class, have to be reassigned from the industries in which they are classified.

ISIC separately mentions the activity of individuals who buy and sell their own real estate. This activity is not yet explicitly mentioned in either the CDN or U.S. SICs but, for purposes of the concordance, has been assumed to be classified in reai estate in the two classifications.

ISIC DIVISION 71 - RENTING OF MACHINERY AND EQUIPMENT WITHOUT OPERATOR AND OF PERSONAL AND HOUSEHOLD GOODS.

This special division in ISIC brings together the renting of machinery and equipment without operator and the renting of personal and household goods. However, the assignment of rental of certain types of equipment needs interpretation because, it is stated in ISIC that, when the renting of leisure and pleasure equipment is undertaken by the recreational industries, it is to be classified in the division for Recreational, cultural and sporting activities, in which the rental of facilities, such as bath houses, lockers and chairs, are assigned in ISIC.

In the CDN SIC, rental of recreational equipment is to be found in four or five differen' industries, mostly in the recreational area. In the U.S. SIC, it is to be found in the recreational area. All three agencies have interpreted the rental of equipment for use on site, as being more appropriately assigned to the sports and recreational industries of ISIC, except for the rental of pleasure craft and bicycles, which, in NACE, is assigned to this ISIC division.

ISIC DIVISION 74 - OTHER BUSINESS ACTIVITIES

In ISIC, Business and management consultancy brings together a large number of consulting activities which, in the CDN and U.S. SICs, are distinguished by subject matter and then associated with the relevant sector. For example, agricultural consulting goes with agriculture or farm management, industrial psychologists with the offices of psychologists, and educational consulting with other educational services.

ISIC INDUSTRY 7430 - ADVERTISING

The scope of advertising services has been defined differently in ISIC and in the CDN and U.S. SICs. In particular, the Canadian advertising industry includes direct mail advertising and excludes aerial advertising, which it assigns to Air Transport, while the opposite is done in the U.S. SIC and ISIC.

ISIC DIVISION 75 - PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION AND DEFENCE, COMPULSORY SOCIAL SECURITY

This division is subdivided by function in ISIC and the U.S. SIC whereas, in the CDN SIC, levels of Government are also broken out. Another major difference, which has been mentioned before, is in the treatment of insurance, where, unemployment and other compulsory insurance programs are considered to be part of this division in ISIC and in the U.S. SIC, whereas, in the CDN SIC, these programs are classified to the appropriate industry within Insurance, depending upon the type of insurance involved.

ISIC DIVISION 80 - EDUCATION

A major difference among the classifications is that, in ISIC, this division is defined more narrowly, and library services and museums and archives are not considered to be part of this division, as in the CDN SIC. ISIC regards these activities as culture and therefore part of Recreational, Cultural and Sporting Activities. The U.S. SIC includes Libraries under Education, and has a separate major group for Museums, Art Galleries, and Botanical and Zoological Gardens, both major groups being under Services.

ISIC DIVISION 85 - HEALTH AND SOCIAL WORK

The important difference, that has been mentioned before, is that ISIC has a broader coverage of health that includes animal health and thus, veterinary services are included here.

Another difference relates to ambulance services. In ISIC, air ambulance and vehicular ambulance services are included in this division, demonstrating a demand approach, whereas, in both the CDN and U.S. SICs, air ambulance services are assigned to Air Transport, using a production-oriented approach. In the CDN SIC, vehicular ambulance services are classified in Health services as in ISIC, indicating the use of a demand approach for this service, but in the U.S. SIC, a supply-oriented approach is taken and the activity is assigned to Local and Suburban Passenger Transportation.

ISIC DIVISION 90 - SEWAGE AND REFUSE DISPOSAL, SANITATION AND SIMILAR ACTIVITIES.

These activities are brought together in ISIC to group a number of different activities by virtue of their connection to "sanitation or cleaning of public infrastructures". A number of these services are also grouped under a three-digit class called "Sanitary Services" in the U.S. SIC. In the CDN SIC, these activities are found in Transport and in Utilities, which includes waste management related activities, and Services which include a range of cleaning services.

ISIC DIVISION 92 - RECREATIONAL, CULTURAL AND SPORTING ACTIVITIES

This is an area in which there is a very different distribution of recreational, sporting and cultural services in the three classifications, and those at the four-digit level result in a large number of partial relationships.
